Analysis

Current Law/Background:

Mitigation of Criminal Offenses

To reduce a homicide to manslaughter, there must be not simply provocation in psychosocial fact, but one of certain fairly well-defined classes of provocation recognized as being adequate as a matter of law. Tripp v. State, 36 Md. App. 459 (1977). If the defense of mitigation prevails, the homicide is not malicious and the offense is reduced from murder to manslaughter. Jones v. State, 37 Md. App. 511 (1977).

A person charged with assault in the first or second degree, reckless endangerment, or causing a prison employee to come into contact with bodily fluid may assert any judicially recognized defense.

A person commits a first-degree assault if the individual (1) intentionally causes or attempts to cause serious physical injury to another person or (2) commits an assault with a firearm. First-degree assault may be reduced to a lesser offense if a defendant can successfully mitigate the necessary intent of first-degree assault.

Gay-trans Panic Defense

According to the LGBT Bar, the “gay/trans panic defense” is “a legal strategy that asks a jury to find that a victim’s sexual orientation or gender identity/expression is to blame for a defendant’s violent reaction, including murder.” Gay/trans panic defense has been banned in nine states.

Gay/trans panic defense is not an independent defense. Instead, it is used to support traditional criminal law defenses like provocation, diminished capacity, or self-defense to acquit or mitigate charges. Specifically, defendants assert that the discovery or perception of a victim’s sex, general identity, and/or sexual orientation (1) was a sufficiently provocative act that drove them to kill or assault another in the heat of passion; (2) caused them to have a temporary mental breakdown, driving them to act violently; or (3) was the basis of a reasonable belief of immediate danger of serious bodily harm.

The strategy can be compared to the use of the sudden discovery of one’s spouse engaged in intimate extramarital acts as mitigation to the defendant’s subsequent criminal actions. The State statutorily prohibits the use of spousal adultery as mitigation for murder to voluntary manslaughter, even though the killing was provoked by the discovery.

Hate Crime Statistics

In September 2019, the Department of State Police published the State of Maryland 2018 Hate/Bias Report. According to the report, 23 of the verified 100 incidents reported to law enforcement in 2018 related to gender identity and sexual orientation.
