Analysis

Current Law:

Divorce

A court may grant an absolute divorce on the following grounds:

- adultery;
- desertion, if the desertion is deliberate and final, has continued for 12 months without interruption, and there is no reasonable expectation of reconciliation;

- conviction of a felony or misdemeanor in any state or federal court, if the defendant has been sentenced to serve at least three years, or an indeterminate sentence, and has served 12 months of the sentence;
- 12-month separation, when the parties have lived separate and apart without cohabitation for 12 months without interruption before the filing of the divorce application;
- insanity, as specified; or
- cruelty of treatment or excessively vicious conduct toward the complaining party or a minor child of the complaining party, if there is no reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

A court may not enter a decree of divorce on the uncorroborated testimony of the person who is seeking the divorce.

Agreements between Spouses

Spouses may make a valid and enforceable deed, agreement, or settlement that relates to alimony, support, property rights, or personal rights. The court may modify any provision of a deed, agreement, or settlement with respect to the care, custody, education, or support of any minor child of the spouses, if the modification would be in the best interests of the child. The courts may generally modify any provision of a deed, agreement, or settlement with respect to alimony or spousal support unless there is an express waiver of alimony or spousal support or a provision specifically stating that the provisions with respect to alimony or spousal support are not subject to any court modification.

State/Local Fiscal Effect: The Judiciary advises that the bill may improve operational efficiency for the circuit courts by providing an expedited method by which spouses can divorce, potentially reducing the number of divorce cases that necessitate protracted litigation. However, any such reduction does not materially impact State or local expenditures for the circuit courts.
