Analysis

Current Law: The Maryland State Flag was adopted in 1904 followed by the adoption of the Black-eyed Susan as the State flower in 1918. Since then, the State has adopted many additional official symbols, as shown in Exhibit 1. The Governor is also authorized to designate a citizen as the State's Poet Laureate.

As the historical agency for Maryland, the State Archives is the central depository for government records of permanent value, as well as certain designated private records. These records are available to the public for research about topics, including State symbols, on an ongoing basis. The State Archivist may, on request or at the State Archivist's discretion, review, evaluate, and make recommendations to the General Assembly regarding State designations under Title 7 of the General Provisions Article.

Background: A tartan is an important symbol of Scotland and Scottish heritage. Tartan is made with alternating bands of colored (pre-dyed) threads woven as both warp and weft at right angles to each other woven into a simple twill. This forms visible diagonal lines where different colors cross, which give the appearance of new colors blended from the original ones. The resulting blocks of color repeat vertically and horizontally in a distinctive pattern of squares and lines known as a sett.

A system of counting threads enables the recording of a tartan pattern in a simple fashion. The pattern listed in the bill is 16 yellow, 16 black, 16 yellow, 16 black, 40 red, 8 white, 8 red, 40 white. An example of this pattern has been designed on the Tartan Designer website.

It is often said that tartans represent clans or families, but that legend is more a nineteenth century invention than historical truth. Nevertheless, the legend stuck and the designation of tartans to commemorate a clan, place, special event, or person continues to be popular. In 2008, the Scottish Register of Tartans was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament, to protect, promote, and preserve tartan. Several states, including Massachusetts and North Carolina, have designated official state tartans.
