Analysis

Bill Summary: A lawsuit is a SLAPP suit if it is brought in bad faith against a person based on an act or statement of the person or to prevent the person from acting or making a statement in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the U.S. Constitution, the Maryland Constitution, or the Maryland Declaration of Rights in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest. This includes (1) a written or oral statement made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; (2) a written or oral statement made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; or (3) a written or oral statement made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest. A lawsuit is not a SLAPP suit if the lawsuit is brought in the public interest or on behalf of the general public and each of the following conditions exist:

- except for claims for attorney's fees, costs, or penalties, the plaintiff does not seek any relief greater than or different from the relief sought for the general public or a class of which the plaintiff is a member; the lawsuit, if successful, would enforce an important right affecting the public interest and would confer a significant benefit, pecuniary or nonpecuniary, to the general public or a large class of persons; and private enforcement is necessary and places a disproportionate financial burden on the plaintiff in relation to the plaintiff's stake in the matter; or
- the lawsuit involves a defendant who (1) primarily engages in the business of selling or leasing goods or services, including insurance, securities, or financial instruments and (2) made a statement or engaged in conduct that consisted of representations of fact about the defendant's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services in the course of delivering the defendant's goods or services or for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of or commercial transactions in the defendant's goods or services.

A defendant in a SLAPP suit is not civilly liable for communicating with a federal, State, or local government body or the public at large, if the defendant, without constitutional malice, acted in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the U.S. Constitution, the Maryland Constitution, or the Maryland Declaration of Rights regarding any matter within the authority of a government body or any public issue or issue of public interest.

A party may appeal from a ruling or failure to rule on a motion to dismiss an alleged SLAPP suit under § 5-807 of the Courts and Judicial Proceedings Article.

Current Law: A lawsuit is a SLAPP suit if it (1) is brought in bad faith against a party who has exercised specified federal or State constitutional rights of free speech in communicating with a government body or the public at large regarding any matter within the authority of the government body or any issue of public concern; (2) is materially related to the defendant's communication; and (3) inhibits or is intended to inhibit the exercise of federal or State constitutional rights of free speech. A defendant in a SLAPP suit is not civilly liable for communicating with a government body or the public at large if the defendant acts without constitutional malice in exercising rights protected by federal or State constitutional rights of free speech regarding any matter within the authority of a government body or any issue of public concern.

A defendant in an alleged SLAPP suit may move to dismiss the suit or move to stay all court proceedings until the matter about which the defendant communicated to the government body or the public at large is resolved.

Section 12-303 of the Courts and Judicial Proceedings Article authorizes a party to appeal from specified types of interlocutory orders entered by a circuit court in a civil case.

Background: SLAPP suit laws protect individuals and groups, many with few assets, from defending costly legal challenges to their lawful exercise of such constitutionally protected rights as free speech, assembly, and the right to petition the government. Covered/protected activities may include writing letters to the editor, circulating petitions, organizing and conducting peaceful protests, reporting unlawful activities, speaking at public meetings, and similar actions.

Plaintiffs in these lawsuits, who typically have far greater resources than defendants, may allege a number of legal wrongs. The more common causes of action include defamation, invasion of privacy, intentional infliction of emotional distress, interference with contract or economic advantage, and abuse of process. Their goal is often not to win the case but rather to cause the defendants to devote such significant resources to defending it that they are unable to continue the challenged activities.
