Senate Bill 189

(Senator Cassilly)

Judicial Proceedings

Condominiums and Homeowners Associations - Election of Governing Body

This bill establishes an additional process by which the unit owners of a condominium, or the lot owners of a homeowners association (HOA), may call a meeting to elect a board of directors for the council of unit owners of a condominium or a governing body of an HOA. The bill's authorization applies to any condominium or HOA that meets the requirements to call a meeting under the bill on or after the bill's October 1, 2019 effective date.

Analysis

Bill Summary/Current Law:

Condominiums

Under the bill, the unit owners of a condominiums may call a meeting to elect a board of directors 365 days after 51% of the units in the condominium are sold to members of the public for residential purposes if (1) the condominium regime was established at least 10 years before the date of the meeting and (2) the unit owners have contributed at least 80% of the operating budget and capital reserves of the condominium for the last 2 years.

Under current law, in a condominium, the council of unit owners must meet to elect a board of directors, as specified in the condominium declaration or bylaws, within 60 days from the date that units representing 50% of the votes in the condominium, or a lesser percentage, if specified in the declaration or bylaws of the condominium, have been conveyed by the developer to members of the public for residential purposes. Before the meeting, the developer must deliver to each unit owner notice that the applicable number of units have been conveyed and the date, time, and place of the meeting. Generally, the declaration of the condominium regime must include the number of votes at meetings of the council of unit owners belonging to each unit.

Homeowners Associations

Similarly, under the bill, the lot owners of an HOA may call a meeting of the members of the HOA to elect a governing body 365 days after 51% of the originally approved lots in the HOA are sold to members of the public for residential purposes if (1) the HOA declaration was initially recorded at least 10 years before the date of the meeting and (2) the lot owners have contributed at least 80% of the operating budget and capital reserves of the HOA for the last 2 years.

Under current law, a meeting of the members of an HOA to elect a governing body of the HOA must be held within 60 days from the date that at least 75%, or a lesser percentage if specified in the governing documents of the HOA, of the total number of lots that may be part of the development after all phases are complete and sold to members of the public for residential purposes. Before the meeting, the declarant must deliver to each lot owner notice that the applicable number of lots have been conveyed and the date, time, and place of the meeting.

Background: Secretary of State registration records show that, as of December 2018, 2,691 condominium regimes have been registered with the State. The State Department of Assessments and Taxation, which maintains assessment records based on class of property, reports that there are 229,859 condominium units in the State as of December 2018. The Foundation for Community Association Research estimated that there were 6,750 community associations in the State in 2017. For more information about condominiums and HOAs, which are broadly referred to as common ownership communities, see the Appendix – Common Ownership Communities.

Appendix – Common Ownership Communities

When a person purchases a single-family home, condominium, or an interest in a cooperative housing corporation, he or she may also be required to join an association of owners, which is intended to act in the common interests of all the homeowners, condominium unit owners, or cooperative owners in the community. Collectively, these associations are often referred to as common ownership communities (COCs). In Maryland, a growing number of newly constructed or newly converted residences are located in some form of a COC.

The affairs of a condominium are governed by a council of unit owners, which comprises all unit owners. Among other powers, the council of unit owners has the power to impose assessments on the unit owners to pay common expenses. A council of unit owners may delegate its powers to a board of directors, officers, or a managing agent. Condominiums are governed under Title 11 of the Real Property Article.

Many new housing developments are subject to a homeowners association (HOA) that is created by a governing document and has the authority to impose mandatory fees on lots in the development in connection with the provision of services or for the benefit of the lots, the lot owners, or the common areas. HOAs are governed under Title 11B of the Real Property Article.

A cooperative housing corporation or “cooperative” is a corporation that owns real property. A resident of a cooperative does not own his or her unit; rather, the person owns an interest in the corporation, which leases the unit to the person for residential use. Cooperatives are governed by the laws in Title 5, Subtitle 6B of the Corporations and Associations Article.

Condominiums and HOAs may be authorized by their governing documents to impose liens on units or lots to collect unpaid assessments or fees. In a cooperative, the governing documents usually provide for the collection of delinquent fees, and evictions for unpaid fees are generally pursued by way of a landlord-tenant action.

Since registration of the various COCs is not required statewide, the exact number of COCs in Maryland is unknown. However, public offering statements for condominium regimes are required by law to be registered with the Secretary of State (SOS). SOS registration records show that, as of December 2018, 2,691 condominium regimes have been registered with the State.¹ The State Department of Assessments and Taxation, which maintains

Task Force on Common Ownership Communities

With a growing number of Marylanders residing in COCs, and evidence that some COCs had issues with governance, dispute resolution, and financial stability, the General Assembly created the Task Force on Common Ownership Communities in 2005 (Chapter 469 of 2005). The issues addressed by the task force included the education and training needs of COC boards and prospective buyers, availability of alternative dispute resolution services, special considerations of aging COCs, collection of assessments, and resale of homes within COCs. The task force met 10 times, held five public hearings, and submitted its final report in December 2006. The report's findings and recommendations have served, in subsequent years, as the basis for numerous pieces of legislation intended to improve the operation of COCs. This legislation, enacted from 2007 through 2017:

- authorized a group of three or more unit or lot owners in a condominium or HOA to petition a circuit court to appoint a receiver in specified situations frequently found in aging communities (Chapter 321 of 2007);
- gave the Consumer Protection Division within the Office of the Attorney General increased authority over violations of the Maryland Homeowners Association Act (Chapter 593 of 2007);
- eased restrictions on the ability of condominiums and HOAs to amend their governing documents (Chapters 144 and 145 of 2008 and Chapter 480 of 2017);
- strengthened the transition process from developer to the governing body of a condominium or HOA by allowing the governing body to terminate specified contracts and requiring the developer to provide specified documents (Chapters 95 and 96 of 2009);
- required the governing body of a COC to purchase fidelity insurance or a fidelity bond covering various acts of malfeasance by COC officers, directors, and other specified employees and agents (Chapters 77 and 78 of 2009 and Chapter 615 of 2010);
- granted priority to a specified portion of a lien of a condominium or HOA over the claim of a holder of a first mortgage or first deed of trust in the event of a foreclosure on a unit or lot (Chapter 387 of 2011);

- limited the amount of damages for which the governing body of a condominium or HOA may foreclose on a lien against a unit owner or lot owner (Chapters 448 and 449 of 2013);
- expanded the purposes for which a condominium's board of directors may hold a closed meeting, similar to the law for an HOA, by allowing a meeting to be closed to consider terms or conditions of a business transaction in the negotiation stage if disclosure could adversely affect the economic interests of the council of unit owners (Chapter 110 of 2013);
- established meeting standards and standards for late charges for delinquent payments, eviction restrictions, an auditing process for books and records, and a dispute settlement mechanism for cooperatives under specified circumstances (Chapter 567 of 2014); and
- altered the contents of a required disclosure for the resale of a condominium unit, authorized the assessment of specified fees by a condominium council of unit owners or an HOA for providing specified information, and required the Department of Housing and Community Development to adjust the maximum authorized fees every two years (Chapter 735 of 2016 and Chapter 817 of 2017).

The task force's report also featured findings and recommendations relating to the creation of an ombudsman in local governments. Since the report's release, Prince George's County created its Common Ownership Communities Program in 2007 with the stated purpose of assisting governing bodies as well as owners and residents of HOAs, residential condominiums, and cooperative housing corporations with education, training, and alternative dispute resolution. Charles County and Montgomery County have offices dedicated to COCs that predate the task force.

Finally, findings and recommendations of the report that have not been codified in statute pertain to reserves of COCs, an insurance deductible cap for unit owners, and the uniformity of COC depository requirements.
