16 (2013 Replacement Volume and 2022 Supplement)

17 Preamble

18 WHEREAS, The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child recognizes 19 that children need special safeguards and care in all aspects of their lives, specifying how 20 children’s rights apply in the digital environment in General Comment No. 25; and

21 WHEREAS, As children spend more of their time interacting with the online world, 22 the impact of the design of online products on their well–being has become a focus of 23 significant concern; and

24 WHEREAS, There is widespread agreement at the international level, and 25 bipartisan agreement in the United States, that more needs to be done to create a safer 26 online space for children to learn, explore, and play; and

EXPLANATION: CAPITALS INDICATE MATTER ADDED TO EXISTING LAW.

[Brackets] indicate matter deleted from existing law.

1 WHEREAS, Lawmakers around the globe have taken steps to enhance privacy
2 protections for children based on the understanding that, in relation to data protection, 3 greater privacy necessarily means greater security and well-being; and

4 WHEREAS, Children should be afforded protections not only by online products and 5 services specifically directed at them, but by all online products they are likely to access,
6 and thus businesses should take into account the unique needs of different age ranges, 7 including the following developmental stages: 0 to 5 years of age, or “preliterate and early 8 literacy”; 6 to 9 years of age, or “core primary school years”; 10 to 12 years of age, or 9 “transition years”; 13 to 15 years of age, or “early teens”; and 16 to 17 years of age, or 10 “approaching adulthood”; and

11 WHEREAS, While it is clear that the same data protection regime may not be 12 appropriate for children of all ages, children of all ages should nonetheless be afforded 13 privacy and protection, and online products should adopt data protection regimes 14 appropriate for children of the ages likely to access those products; and

15 WHEREAS, According to the Pew Research Center, in 2022, 97% of American 16 teenagers aged 13–17 used the Internet every day, with 46% responding they used the 17 Internet almost constantly; and, additionally, 36% of teens reported being concerned about 18 their social media use, while an earlier Pew Research Center study found that 59% of teens 19 have been bullied or harassed online; and

20 WHEREAS, The findings of the Pew Research Center are not surprising, given what 21 is known about controllers’ use of personal data and how it is utilized to inform 22 manipulative practices, to which children are particularly vulnerable; and

23 WHEREAS, Online products that are likely to be accessed by children should offer 24 strong privacy protections by design and by default, including by disabling features that 25 profile children using their previous behavior, browsing history, or assumptions of their 26 similarity to other children in order to offer them detrimental material; and

27 WHEREAS, Ensuring robust privacy, and thus safety, protections for children by 28 design is consistent with federal safety laws and policies applied to children’s products, 29 regulating everything from toys to clothing to furniture and games; and

30 WHEREAS, The consumer protections that federal safety laws apply to children’s 31 products require these products to comply with certain safety standards by their very 32 design, so that harms to children, and in some cases other consumers, are prevented; and

33 WHEREAS, It is the intent of the Maryland General Assembly that the Maryland
34 Age-Appropriate Design Code Act promote innovation by businesses whose online products 35 are likely to be accessed by children by ensuring that those online products are designed in 36 a manner that recognizes the distinct needs of children within different age ranges; and

1 WHEREAS, It is the intent of the Maryland General Assembly that businesses 2 covered by the Maryland Age–Appropriate Design Code Act may look to guidance and 3 innovation in response to the Age–Appropriate Design Code established in the United 4 Kingdom and California when developing online products that are likely to be accessed by 5 children; now, therefore,
