Analysis

Bill Summary: When a defendant pleads not guilty, the defendant may, with the consent of the State, enter into an agreement with the State and the court may find facts justifying a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, defer entry of a conviction, and place the defendant on probation before judgment subject to reasonable conditions only if (1) the court finds that the best interests of the defendant and the public welfare would be served and (2) the defendant consents in writing to the probation before judgment. If the defendant violates the terms of the probation agreement, the court may enter a finding of guilt and impose a sentence.

The agreement must specify that:

- the defendant does not admit to the facts offered by the State and pleads not guilty;
- the defendant accepts probation in exchange for the court expressly withholding a finding of guilt;
- the defendant knowingly and voluntarily waives the right to a trial and the right to appeal the probation agreement;
- if the court finds the defendant has violated the terms of the probation agreement (1) the court may find the defendant guilty of the underlying crime as a result of the violation and (2) on a finding of guilt, the court may sentence the defendant for up to the maximum penalty for the underlying crime; and
- the defendant agrees to these specified provisions and the terms and conditions of probation ordered by the court.

After an agreement is placed on the record, the court must make a finding that there are sufficient facts to support a finding of the defendant's guilt but that the court does not do so and instead defers judgment and imposes probation before judgment. The consent of a defendant to and the receipt of such a disposition by the defendant must be considered as a probation before judgment for all other purposes under State law.

Current Law:

Probation Before Judgment

Probation before judgment requires a finding of guilt by a judge or jury – either after trial or after a guilty plea by the defendant. When a defendant pleads guilty or nolo contendere or is found guilty of a crime, a court may stay the entering of judgment, defer further proceedings, and place the defendant on probation subject to reasonable conditions if (1) the court finds that the best interests of the defendant and the public welfare would be served and (2) the defendant gives written consent after determination of guilt or acceptance of a nolo contendere plea. Statutory provisions prohibit probation before judgment in specified types of cases.

The conditions a court may place on a defendant include ordering the defendant to (1) pay a fine or monetary penalty to the State or make restitution or (2) participate in various programs. Also, as a condition of probation, the court may order a person to a term of custodial confinement or imprisonment. For purposes of probation before judgment, “custodial confinement” means home detention, a corrections options program meeting specified criteria, or inpatient drug or alcohol treatment.

A defendant who consents to and receives probation before judgement waives the right to appeal at any time from the judgment of guilt. Before granting a stay of the judgment, the court must notify the defendant of the consequences of consenting to and receiving probation before judgment. On violation of a condition of probation, the court may enter judgment and proceed as if the defendant had not been placed on probation.

Upon fulfilling the conditions of probation before judgment, the defendant is discharged from probation by the court. The discharge is a final disposition of the matter and is “without judgment of conviction and is not a conviction for the purpose of any disqualification or disability imposed by law because of conviction of a crime.” Under certain circumstances, a defendant who fulfills the conditions of probation before judgment may file a petition for expungement of the police record, court record, or other record maintained by the State or political subdivision relating to the defendant.

Immigration and Nationality Act and Maryland Rules

While probation before judgment is not considered a conviction under Maryland law, it is considered a conviction under federal immigration law. Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, the term “conviction” means, with respect to an alien, a formal judgment of guilt of the alien entered by a court or, if adjudication of guilt has been withheld, where (1) a judge or jury has found the alien guilty or the alien has entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere or has admitted sufficient facts to warrant a finding of guilt and (2) the judge has ordered some form of punishment, penalty, or restraint on the alien’s liberty to be imposed. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(48)(A).

Pursuant to Maryland Rule 4-242, before a court accepts specified pleas, the court, the State’s Attorney, and/or defense counsel must advise the defendant of the potential immigration consequences of the plea and advise the defendant to consult with defense counsel if the defendant is represented and needs additional information concerning the potential consequences. The omission of advice concerning the collateral consequences of a plea does not itself mandate that the plea be declared invalid.
