House Bill 295
Appropriations

(Delegate Henson, et al.)

Education, Energy, and the Environment

Public Institutions of Higher Education - Student Withdrawal Policy - Reimbursement of Tuition and Fees (Cameron Carden Act of 2023)

This bill requires each public institution of higher education to adopt a policy that authorizes a student to withdraw for “extenuating circumstances” (which specifically includes illness, injury, hospitalization, and mental health and wellness). The policy must include a provision to reimburse tuition and fees for the semester in which a student withdraws if the extenuating circumstances inhibit the student’s ability to acquire an education at the public institution of higher education, as defined in the policy. The bill takes effect July 1, 2023.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: University System of Maryland (USM), Morgan State University (MSU), St. Mary’s College of Maryland (SMCM), and Baltimore City Community College (BCCC) higher education revenues decrease, potentially significantly, due to reimbursing tuition and fees of students who withdraw under the policy developed for extenuating circumstances. While the impact cannot be reliably estimated, significantly more students qualify for a refund. Expenditures are not materially affected; institutions can develop policies using existing resources.

Local Effect: Local community college revenues decrease, potentially significantly, due to reimbursing tuition and fees of students who withdraw under the policy developed for extenuating circumstances. While the impact cannot be reliably estimated, significantly more students qualify for a refund. Expenditures are not materially affected; colleges can develop policies using existing resources. This bill imposes a mandate on a unit of local government.

Small Business Effect: None.

Analysis

Current Law: Policies for withdrawing from classes and receiving tuition refunds vary considerably across public institutions of higher education.

Public Four-year Institutions

University System of Maryland and Constituent Institutions: USM does not have a uniform policy regarding withdrawing from classes or tuition refunds. However, for example, at the University of Maryland, College Park Campus (UMCP), a student may request a withdrawal from all classes at any time between the first and last day of classes for the semester. In exceptional cases, a retroactive withdrawal may be granted based on documented requests in which extenuating circumstances significantly impaired the student's ability to complete the semester and officially withdraw by the established semester deadlines. Such circumstances include, but are not limited to, medical or psychological causes. To be readmitted, a student who has earned at least a 2.0 cumulative grade point average with no previous withdrawals may apply for readmission. All other students who find it necessary to leave UMCP are required to petition the Faculty Review Board to be reinstated.

Further, at UMCP, undergraduate students can adjust their schedule (add, drop, etc.) until the close of business on the last day of the Schedule Adjustment Period. After the end of Schedule Adjustment, students are limited to dropping a maximum of four credits during the Drop Period. Any tuition refund depends on when a course was dropped, and whether the student is a full-time or part-time student. In general, there is no tuition refund after the first five days of classes; however, UMCP advised in response to a prior introduction of the bill that it does have a refund policy for documented extraordinary circumstances.

Morgan State University: MSU advised in response to a prior introduction of the bill that its policy allows a student to withdraw during a semester at a prorated tuition rate depending on the withdrawal date. MSU does have a closing date that prohibits withdrawals afterward. If the student withdraws after the closing date, the student does not receive a refund unless special documented circumstances apply.

St. Mary's College of Maryland: SMCM advised in response to a prior introduction of the bill that its policy allows a student to withdraw for any reason, and a refund schedule allows for an amount of tuition and fees to be refunded, which declines over time.

Community Colleges

Baltimore City Community College: BCCC advised in response to a prior introduction of the bill that it allows a student to receive a refund of 100% tuition and fees if the student withdraws before the first class meeting. Refunds are not allowed after the first class meeting, as BCCC advises that tuition and fees are a large revenue source for the institution and are needed to serve their student population.

Local Community Colleges: Local community colleges do not have a uniform policy regarding withdrawing from classes or tuition refunds. However, for example, at Anne Arundel Community College, for credit courses scheduled for eight weeks or more, a student may drop a class for five calendar days after the first scheduled class meeting and receive a full refund. Students have five additional calendar days to withdraw from the class and receive a 60% reduction of the tuition, general student fees, and lab fees charged for the class. If a student withdraws more than 10 calendar days after the date of the first scheduled class meeting, no refunds are issued. Also, at Montgomery College, to obtain a refund, a course must be officially dropped by the refund deadline for the course. For specified documented involuntary withdrawals, including call to active military duty or illness that made it impossible for the student to continue classes, a student may receive a prorated refund of tuition depending on the specific student circumstances. Fees are nonrefundable.

Federal Student Aid

When a student applies for federal financial aid, the student agrees that financial aid funds will be used for educational purposes only. Therefore, if a student withdraws before completing his or her program, a portion of the funds may need to be returned. Institutions are required to follow federal laws and regulations regarding federal student aid. In general, up through the 60% point in a period of enrollment, an institution may use a pro rata schedule to determine the amount of Title IV funds the student has earned at the time of withdrawal. After the 60% point in the period of enrollment, a student has earned 100% of the Title IV funds. If the amount disbursed to the student is greater than the amount the student earned, the unearned funds must be returned. If the amount disbursed to the student is less than the amount the student earned, and for which the student is otherwise eligible, he or she is eligible to receive a post-withdrawal disbursement of the earned aid that was not received.

State/Local Revenues: Due to reimbursing tuition and fees of students who withdraw under their required policies for extenuating circumstances, USM, MSU, SMCM, BCCC, and local community college higher education revenues decrease, potentially significantly. The impact cannot be reliably estimated as it is unknown how many additional students may request and receive a full tuition and fees refund for the semester under the bill than under the institutions' existing policies. The policy adopted by each institution must define the extenuating circumstances that inhibit the student's ability to acquire an education at the public institution of higher education and, thus, qualify for a tuition and fee refund under the bill.

Several institutions advised in response to a prior introduction of the bill that they have a policy that allows for tuition and fee refunds under extraordinary circumstances that require documentation. Likewise, institutions generally have a period at the beginning of each term during which a student may withdraw for any reason. The institutions did not provide information on the number of students that currently withdraw or the number of students that receive tuition refunds when they withdraw. Nevertheless, significantly more students qualify for a refund under the bill.

Other institutions' policies allow for a prorated refund under specified circumstances or a refund for just tuition (not fees). It is assumed that institutions that offer a prorated tuition and/or fees reimbursement must offer a full tuition and fees reimbursement for specified students under the bill. Thus, higher education revenues decrease for institutions that currently provide prorated refunds or do not refund fees. However, it is assumed that room and board are not considered fees eligible for reimbursement.

It is unclear how federal financial aid would be handled under the bill; however, it is assumed that institutions follow federal law and regulations. Failure to follow federal student aid laws and regulations could result in penalties and restrictions in participating in the Title IV federal student aid program.
