I am more independent now that I work for the Montgomery County Government, and I can walk to work/drive anywhere close to my home. It is good for me to be independent now if something happens to my parents. I believe young people with disabilities should be able to make some of their own decisions even if it's hard. They can have another relative or friend/service provider to count on if they have a hard time, and sometimes they can make their own decisions for themselves without difficulties. Decisions and choices are hard for me, but I have learned how to solve problems like creating and cooking my own menus and speaking up when I have issues in my apartment. I can do this myself but I always have people to ask if I need help. More young people like me should be able to do this.
