Chair Smith, Vice Chair Waldstreicher and members of the Judicial Proceedings Committee:

I, Andrea Cantora, am testifying in support of SB 0771, the Maryland Second Look Act. I am submitting this testimony as a faculty member in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. Passage of the Maryland Second Look Act would create a meaningful opportunity for sentence modification for incarcerated people after having served 20 years of their sentence. I firmly believe that those individuals who are able to demonstrate their growth and rehabilitation, such that they are no longer a threat to public safety, should have the opportunity for release.

In addition to my role as an associate professor, I am also the Director of the University of Baltimore's Second Chance College Program – a college program that operates at Jessup Correctional Institution. Since 2014 I have come to know many men serving very long sentences, including life. The group of men that I have come to know are the most motivated to succeed, most involved in prison programming, are mentors to younger men, and serve as facilitators in self-help and violence prevention programs. In my 23 years of experience working with incarcerated people I am most impressed by the persistence and accomplishments of those serving very long sentences.

Consistent with my own observations, research finds prisoners serving long sentences are the easiest population to manage, most compliant with prison rules, and most likely to mentor younger prisoners.<sup>1</sup> The recidivism research on lifers shows that once released they have very low rates of recidivism. Specifically, lifers who are paroled are one-third less likely to be rearrested within three years compared to all released prisoners.<sup>2</sup> In California, a 15-year longitudinal research study was conducted on 860 parolees sentenced to life. Within the 15-year study period only 5 of those individuals (less than 1%) were convicted of a new felony.<sup>3</sup> In Maryland, we can look to the Unger releases from 2012 and to date no one released under Unger has returned to prison.

Research also indicates that offenders “age out” of crime. As people age they are less likely to engage in risky behavior and more likely to conform to societal norms. Achieving life milestones (e.g., marriage, children, employment, etc.), and natural maturation, are often the factors that change the life course of someone engaged in criminal behavior. Unfortunately, the longer someone remains incarcerated the more likely they are to lose their social networks on the outside, and the less likely they are to get married and obtain a meaningful career.

This bill is an important tool in making meaningful opportunities for release happen. Currently, incarcerated people in MD can only petition the Court for modification within 90 days of sentencing, severely limiting any potential sentence modifications<sup>1</sup>. This bill also has serious racial justice implications, given that of the 2,212 people serving life sentences in MD, 80% are Black<sup>2</sup>, a huge disparity compared to the 31% of Black Marylanders in the general population<sup>3</sup>.

In 2021, the General Assembly made a positive step by passing the Juvenile Restoration Act SB0494/HB0409 which allowed individuals who were minors sentenced as adults the ability to petition the Court for sentence modification after 20 years. The Maryland Second Look Act would extend this ability both to youth sentenced after the JRA went into effect (who were excluded from the bill) and other incarcerated people in Maryland who committed a crime aged 18 and up.

For these reasons, I encourage you to vote favorably on the Maryland Second Look Act SB0771.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Andrea Cantora, Ph.D.
